

Experts condemn city crime rankings

■ List rates Oakland as fourth most dangerous

By Elizabeth Williamson

WASHINGTON POST

If the FBI has said it once, it has said it a thousand times: Do not use its crime statistics to rank the nation's most dangerous cities.

That didn't stop CG Press from releasing a book this week that does just that. It didn't stop officials of cities on the list — not of the ones ranked safest, of course — from furiously pro- testing that the rankings were not only meaningless but unfair.

Oakland ranked as the fourth most dangerous city in the country, prompting Mayor Ron Dellums and police Chief Wayne Tucker to question the value of the study.

Richmond wasn't far behind Oakland, ranking No. 9. Detroit and St. Louis fared even worse, ranking No. 1 and No. 2. Indeed, cities are led the airports to the top of the ranking.

"It really makes you wonder if the organization is truly concerned with real safety or if it's increasing their profits," Detroit police Chief Paul W. O'Gallagher said in a statement quoted by the Associated Press. "With crime experts across the country continually pronouncing the findings, I believe the answer is clear."
